

Your information has been requested to complete an Arizona Humanities Project Grant Application as a humanities scholar.

As defined by Arizona Humanities, a humanities scholar meets one or more of the following qualifications:

- Holds an advanced degree (M.A. or higher) in a humanities discipline, i.e. anthropology, archaeology, art history & criticism, comparative religion, ethics, history, jurisprudence, language, linguistics, literature, philosophy, and certain aspects of the social sciences.
- Is a recognized expert with a verifiable record of working, teaching, and publishing in a humanities discipline and/or is acknowledged as such by other scholars in the field.
- Is a Native American elder or traditional teacher involved in a project whose focus is on their particular tribe.

The consulting Humanities Scholar should be involved in the planning of the project and be able to represent to the Grants Review Panel how they will help make sense of the humanities content in the program. The centrality of the humanities is one of the most important criteria Grants Review Panel considers when deciding which projects to fund. Scholars who embody the knowledge, methods, and values of their disciplines are the chief means of bringing the humanities to the public.

Please compose a one-page letter detailing the information below to indicate your agreement to participate in the project.

Please note: This letter must be completed and submitted in the application by the application deadline. Please contact the program's Project Director with any questions regarding the application content.

Qualifications: Briefly describe how you meet the qualifications of a Humanities Scholar

Narrative: Describe what you will contribute to the project. For example, what issues will you address, what questions will you raise about the topic, and what humanities approaches will you employ (historical, philosophical, literary criticism, etc.)? Summarize your interpretative statements as much as possible, and remember, these answers will assist the review committee in determining the humanities content of the project.
